

ABSTRACT

The present invention is directed to a method for decreasing high frequency (HF) radiation emission in a power line. The method involves transmitting a utility power signal over the power line and transmitting a high frequency communication signal over the power line so as to provide a combined utility and high frequency signal over the power line. A plurality of inductors are provided, disposed along the power line.